After nearly seven years of ongoing efforts, the Museum completed the inventory of its entire painting collection on November 5, 2018. The final canvases were unrolled, examined, and catalogued that day as part of the Museum’s first Facebook Live experience. Due to their size and complexity, the inventory of paintings continued throughout 2018 yielding 10 “stowaways,” bringing the total number of paintings in the collection to 841 and the total collection to more than 3,000 objects.

A key highlight of the year included the exhibition A Daughter’s Eye/A Daughter’s Voice, which presented Still’s art and ideas as seen through the eyes of the curator – the younger of Clyfford Still’s two daughters, Sandra Still Campbell. As another example of the Museum’s continued efforts to invite guests with varied perspectives and backgrounds to curate from the collection, the exhibition presented a highly personal and truly original vision. To complement the onsite experience and extend content beyond the physical Museum location, CSM also produced the narrative-style podcast A Daughter’s Voice, which was installed in the galleries and made available online.

Based on overwhelmingly positive visitor feedback about the Drawing Room, an interactive activity space presented in conjunction with Clyfford Still: The Works on Paper in 2016, the Museum reimagined the Boettcher Foundation Education Gallery to include a permanent hands-on area called The Making Space. The newly imagined art studio offers a range of fun offerings and collaborative activities for visitors of all ages. The Making Space also features touchscreen-enabled video kiosks showcasing short videos about Still and his work.

The Museum’s free, standards-aligned, activity-based school program inStill welcomed its 10,000th student on September 18, 2018. Since its inception in 2014, the inStill Gallery Experiences have continued to be offered free of charge and the Museum also offers bus funding to qualifying schools.

The Museum also purchased property directly across Bannock St. with the assistance of the CSM Foundation. Planning for developing this property is ongoing.

In 2018, the Museum welcomed more than 48,000 visitors and ended the year with 1,035 member households. Due to the support of our dedicated foundation, CSM ended 2018 in a strong financial position.
THE YEAR IN REVIEW

EXHIBITIONS

Highlights from the Collection
January 26–September 9, 2018

In 2018, the Museum surrounded the special exhibitions with a new display of the permanent collection installed throughout all of the Lanny and Sharon Martin Galleries. This presentation featured approximately 50 paintings and 30 works on paper spanning Clyfford Still's 60-year career.

The mostly chronological narrative began in the 1920s with traditional landscape subjects and Depression-era figure studies that transformed into quasi-abstractions. These culminated with Still's groundbreaking wartime abstractions and monumental late paintings that highlighted the artist at the height of his powers.

More than 25 works in the installation had never been exhibited previously, including a number of early anatomical sketches discovered in the Clyfford Still Archives.

Spotlight 02: A Study in Connoisseurship, A Newly Discovered Painting from the Yukon
January 26–April 29, 2018

This second feature in the Clyfford Still Museum’s Spotlight series—which highlighted select works through small, highly focused exhibitions—explored a double-sided, undocumented early painting which may have been made in Alberta. Presented to the Museum in 2013 as a potential Clyfford Still work with an intriguing backstory, the painting is on long-term loan to the Museum for further research and study.

Using this painting as a case study, Spotlight 02 illustrated how professionals examine unauthenticated artworks to determine their authorship. The exhibition presented verified Still artworks in juxtaposition with the undocumented painting’s front composition, as well as other works that could relate to the painting’s reverse composition.

The Museum encouraged visitors to make both technical and thematic comparisons between the artworks, study historical documentation that places Still’s family in 1920s Alberta where the artwork may have been painted, and draw conclusions about the authorship of this work.
A Light of His Own: Clyfford Still at Yaddo
May 4–September 9, 2018
Curated by Patricia Failing

During the summers of 1934 and 1935, Clyfford Still attended Yaddo, the artists’ retreat in Saratoga Springs, NY as a guest. At the time, his resume was minimal compared to that of other guests. Still was a 28-year-old graduate student and teaching fellow at Washington State College in Pullman when first invited to Yaddo. He remembered his time at Yaddo as the first time in his life where he felt free to think, dream, and paint.

The center of the exhibition and its accompanying catalogue included the 19 small paintings Still created at Yaddo. These renderings of regional farming scenes and rural landscapes represented newly introspective figurative work that Still understood as “bordering on the tragic” and “forcefully moving.” A Light of His Own also included Still’s significant hand/head study on loan from the Munson-Williams-Proctor Arts Institute in Utica, NY.

Later works illustrated ways Still repurposed his Yaddo images, as his career progressed, into grotesque social commentary and symbolic forms alluding to sexual drive and mythical dualisms. As the metaphorical content of these post-Yaddo compositions began to intertwine and grow, figures merged, fragmented and dissolved, igniting visual energies that ultimately inspired Clyfford Still to create some of the mid-20th century’s most unprecedented modernist paintings.

A Daughter’s Eye/A Daughter’s Voice
September 14, 2018–January 13, 2019
Curated by Sandra Still Campbell

Curated by the younger of Clyfford Still’s two daughters, Sandra Still Campbell, A Daughter’s Eye/A Daughter’s Voice presented a highly personal and original vision of Still’s art and ideas. Two-thirds of the featured works had never been exhibited, and many had been unrolled and stretched for the first time since Still painted them. Campbell’s reflections about her father, his art, and their life together accompanied the paintings, and were presented both in wall texts and a podcast. Her audio commentary unfolded in four chapters, one for each of the exhibition’s galleries.

Most of the paintings Campbell selected for the exhibition exemplified Still’s concept of recapitulation, a term used in musical theory to describe repetition with slight modifications. Campbell recalled her father using the word often to express his desire to recontextualize and refine compositions by repeating, juxtaposing, and transforming familiar forms, lines, and colors. Campbell also chose many works that illustrated his consistent exploration of the color ochre to capture the organic essence of all human and earthly things.

“My father fought against making his work inhuman—sterile, cold, lacking in humanity,” Campbell said. “He was all about the fire of the human spirit.”
CSM continued to offer a comprehensive program to promote public and scholarly understanding of the life and work of Clyfford Still. Lectures, gallery talks, adult education courses, film screenings, and concerts support the Museum’s core membership, yet also provide a platform to increase relevance in the community at-large.

Successful signature programs such as One Painting at a time, which challenges participants to spend quality time with a single artwork, and Music in the Galleries, live musical performances inspired by Still’s record collection, advanced the exhibitions and promoted further exploration of the Collection.

The galleries and forecourt were abuzz on September 8, 2018 as the Museum welcomed more than 160 guests for the second New Americans Day, in collaboration with nine different branches of the Denver Public Library (DPL). CSM gallery teachers led tours of the Museum, with translators facilitating discussion in Amharic, Arabic, Somali, Spanish, and Vietnamese. Guests also enjoyed creating their own art in The Making Space and other activities including face and henna painting, music of bands Mariachi Sol de Mi Tierra and Chihera (a family band playing music of Zimbabwe), Indian dance by performers from Mudra Dance Studio, and refreshments.

The education team continued the partnership by visiting participating library branches to offer activities ranging from art making with children to assisting DPL with English language learning exercises for adults, all with the goal of getting to know the community and finding ways to make Clyfford Still and the Museum relevant to them. Each Plaza visit was met with gratitude and success; between participants, library staff, and CSM gallery teachers, all parties reported engagement, enthusiasm, and new connections.

The priority of learning and education is hard wired into the Museum. CSM’s free, standards-aligned, activity-based school program inStill welcomed its 10,000th student in 2018. inStill Gallery Experiences proudly served 2,489 students onsite in 2018, with an additional 2,509 engaged at offsite locations. This represented a dramatic increase when compared to 1,730 students served by inStill in 2017.
NEW ENGAGEMENT

In 2018, the Museum worked both internally and externally to advance its diversity and inclusiveness efforts. CSM has developed ongoing relationships with the Denver Public Library, RedLine’s Reach Studio, VSA Colorado, Lighthouse Writer’s Workshop, local colleges and universities, and many other to produce collaborative, inclusive programming.

In addition to more academic approaches to audience research and engagement, in 2018, the Museum continued connecting organically with community groups and new cultural partners. The Museum partnered with the Denver Architecture Foundation to present a quarterly lecture series.

To build on the strategic audience engagement initiative started in 2017 with the assistance of Slover Linett, CSM began integrating findings to more deeply engage visitors by developing new exhibition strategies, didactics, and marketing communications, while also instituting a longer-term benchmarking evaluation of the museum experience. Phase two of the study concluded at the end of 2018. This phase challenged the Museum to think more broadly about how to direct its energies to engage a broader audience. Psychographic audience segmentation work occurred to identify the various types of metro Denver audiences who could be potential visitors to CSM, laying specific framework to prioritize thinking, develop a common language across departments, and make the interpretive planning process more holistic and consistent.
